COURSE DESCRIPTION: This course is designed for teachers and education students who would like to broaden and deepen their knowledge about U.S. immigration policy, including documented status and deportation and how it affects the education system in the Midwest. The course will explore contemporary literature as a means to teach critical consciousness, global citizenship and cultural competency. Through attendance at the day-long workshop, educators will hear from experts on U.S. immigration policy, documented status, youth development, critically conscious pedagogy, and benefits of using literature and art in the classroom. In particular, Professor Marta Caminero-Santangelo, Professor of English and Director of CLACS, will facilitate a book discussion centered on teaching about global citizenship in Julia Alvarez’s novel. We’ve also got a presentation about using art to teach cultural competency and a guided tour of a special exhibition that explores our nation’s history of immigration. This course also has an online learning component, in which educators will be introduced to additional resources in order to produce and share lessons plans with K-12 educators.
COURSE OBJECTIVES:
At the end of the course, students will be able to:
• Identify key aspects of current U.S. immigration policy;
• Outline the history of immigration in the U.S., including the history of migrant labor;
• Consider psychological and mental health effects in students and family caused by immigration;
• Identify pedagogical methods to teach about immigration in K-12 classrooms;
• Evaluate the importance using literature to teach about topics such as global citizenship and cultural competency;
• Evaluate the importance of using art to teach about topics such as global citizenship and cultural competency;
• Identify local and regional resources available to students regardless of their documented status in the U.S.;
• Workshop and share lesson plans with regional K-12 educators.
